The American Guide Series: The New Deal's Travel Books of the 1930s

Wednesday, April 19, 7:00p-9:30p. Community Room in the Library

The Writer's Project during the Great Depression included a series of travel guides for every state. The books contain fascinating perspectives about American life in the 1930s when much of the country was still heavily rural with traditions from that pre-industrial age. Using these books to find elements of that era is an experience that can make a road trip to Michigan or any other state incredibly rewarding. Presented by Jim Craft, Oakland County Historical Commission.
